"Sweeping round a curve
Whose outer flexture bordered an abyss,
The cars were canted down the precipice,
And seven of us killed. But what of that."
Twas the curve did it. And the engineer,
Being upon a bender, was excused."

"Train borne traveler, rushing by, As thou passeth, vipe thine aye. Here a car, well filled with freight, Killed sixteen and wounded eight. For a moment, friends, be weepers As you past the railroad sleepers. You may share our fate—why not? Ero you reach the next depot.

Ere you reach the next depot.

"Here are deposited the bones,
(The flesh being torn off,)
Of an unknown man,
Who, being deaf, blind and lame,
Neglected to obey the customary signals,
And was run over as a punishment
For his continuer,
The engineer promptly stopped the engine
After it had cut the body in two,
And, with most exemplary humanity.
Conveyed the remains to an adjacent wood-shed
Where all means of resuscitation were tried;
But alsa!
The vital spark had fled!
For the humanity they displayed;
The engineer and signal men
Were presented by the company
With a service of plate.
Go thou and do likewise."

A Pretty Good Story.

In one of our southern seaboard cities. and on a long street-almost a roadleading therefrom to the country, dwells an apothecary; a very tall and remarkably slender person-so thin, in fact, that one would suppose he fed exclusively on his own professional mixtures. No tailor venture to cut a coat or any other garment in any way approaching a snug fit to his person, for fear of having the work returned on his hands, and in that case they would fit nobody else.

And yet, with this extraordinary paucity of flesh, there was a great supply of humor in our here; he was extravagantly fond of practical jokes, and practiced them freely, when occasion and opportunity offered. He had an electric machine secluded from sight, and when any lazy person sauntered into his shop, and ventured to indulge in a nap or lounge, he was sure to be shocked into activity, and pushed off. He was a great advocate for temperance, and yet was ready to furnish gratis a brimming glass of any sort of liquor any customer might fancy; his liquor was found invari-ably to produce more nausea than any other sensation.

But a contrivance which afforded him most merriment was a skeleton of a full grown person in a closet of easy access in his shop. This skeleton was placed erect on a platform which ran on smooth wheels; and when the door was opened, this platform was pulled forward by an unseen thin wire or string, which connected it with the bolting of the closet door. There reliance should be placed upon amusewall behind the skeleton, and passing over each shoulder-bone were attached to the bones of the wrist. Consequently, when early age, one duty cannot afford relaxathe closet door was opened, the platform on which the skeleton stood not only advanced, but both arms and hands were

If any intexicated, noisy, boisterous, or impudent fellow came into his shop, the apothecary would manage in some way to lead him to open that door, and it rarely failed (as he used to say) "to take the liquor and spunk out of him." He had two or three apprenticed lads in his employ, who naturally relished these jokes, and practised them, with his full consent, when he might be absent.

One day during his temporary absence a sailor came drifting along-occasionally stopping and dancing a jig and singing, to the great merriment of a gang of boys who followed and surrounded him. He was just drunk enough to play the fool, and not to drunk to navigate. He eventually brought up at the door of our apothecary, and bracing himself in the doorway, yelled out:

"Hellow, my hearties! here you are with your staffed alligators and gallipot, and mixins for sick folks! Why the devil don't you keep grog for tuff folks like me?" and here he shuffled off a rigadoor, and made himself very merry. "Well, Jack," said one of the lads, "what kind of grog do you want?"
"I'll take brandy," was the prompt

"Very well; go and help yourself;" (handing him a tin mug,) "you will find it in that closet."

Jack went as directed, and pulling open the closet door, he found himself within grasping distance of an advancing skeleton; he incontinently fell back a step, dropped his tin cup: turned ash color, made one spring to the door, and when he turned, and being informed of the event, was greatly amused, but sadly lamented

"I would not have missed seeing it," said he, "for a great deal. I do wonder if he will come back this way?"

But this was hardly probable, and yet it was the only way back to town.
In the course of a few hours, however, sure enough, Jack was heard at a distance on his way back, singing and dancing. Our apothecary anticipating an encore, went out on his door-steps, and elevating his thin person and extending his long emaciated arm and hand, very kindly beckoned Jack to repeat his visit. Jack no sconer saw him than he "put his helm hard a port," and steered over to the other side of the street, buttoning his jacket over his breast, and pressing his tarpole hat closer on his head, so as to be ready for a run if chase was given.

for a run if chase was given.

"Ay-yey, old bag of bones," says Jack;
"there you are again, are you. You think I don't know you, now you've got your clothes on!" and away he went on his course, leaving our apothecary rather puzzled in deciding which of the two got the sharpest end of that joke.

Inclined to be Quarrelsome.

We heard that prince of story tellers, Tom Colloway, get off the following, amid bursts of laughter, the other night. Squaring himself and stretching out his legs, he began:

There was once a little, slim-built fellow, rich as a Jew, and independent as the devil, riding along a highway in the State of Georgia, when he overtook a man driving a drove of hogs by the help of a big, raw-boned, six-foot-two specimen of humanity. Stopping the last-named indi-vidual, he accosted him:

"I say, are these your hogs?" "No, sir, I'm to work by the month." "What pay might you be getting, friend?"
"Ten dollars a month, and whisky thrown in," was the reply.

"Well, look here, I'm a weak, little, inoffensive man, and people are apt to impose on me, d'ye see. Now, I'll give you twenty-five dollars a month to ride. along with me and protect me," said Mr.

Gardner. "But," he added, as a thought struck him, "how might you be on a fight?" "Never been licked in my life," rejoined the six-footer. "Just the man I want. Is't a bargain?"

queried Gardner. Six-footer ruminated. "Twenty-five dollars-double wages-nothing to do but to ride around and smash a fellow's mug occasionally, when he's sassy.'

Six-footer accepted.
They rode along, till just at night they reached a village inn.
Dismounting at the door, they went in. Gardner immediately singled out the biggest man in the room and picked a fuss with him. After considerable promiseuous jawing, Gardner turned to his fighting friend, and inti-mated that the licking of that man had become a sad necessity. Six-footer peeled, went in, and came out first best. The next night, at another hotel, the same scene was re-enacted-Gardner getting into a row with the biggest man in the place, and six-footer doing the fighting. At last, on the third day, they came to a ferry kept by a huge, double-fisted man, who had never been licked in his life. While crossing the river, Gardner, as usual, began to find fault and "blow." The ferryman naturally got mad, threw things around kind o' loose, and told him his opinion of their kind. Gardner then turned to his friend "from the shoulder," and gently broke the intelligence to him,

"that he was sorry, but that it was absolutely necessary to thrash that ferryman."
Six-foeter nodded his head, but suid nothing. It was plainly to be seen that he did not relish the job, by the way he shrugged his shoulders, but there was no help for it. So when they reached the shore, both stripped, and at it they went. Up and down the bank, over the sand into the water, they fought, scratched, gouged bit, and rolled, till, at the end of an hour, the ferryman caved. Six-footer was triumphant, but it was tough work. Going up to his employer, he scratched his head for a moment, and then broke forth:

"Look here, Mr. Gardner, your salary sets mighty well, but—I'm—of—the—opinion—that you are inclined to be quarrelsome. Here I've only been with you three days, and I've licked the three biggest men in the country! I think the firm had better dissolve, for you see, Mr. Gardner, I'm afraid you're inclined to be quarrelsome, and I reckon I'll draw!"

Amusement as a Part of Education. That which is recreation and diversion to the man is nothing else than an accumulation of fatigue for a child. In order wires, fastened to the ments of his own choice than upon exercises, notions, and even plays, prescribed tion after another duty. On the contrary, when an amusement is imposed upon a child, it becomes a new fatigue for him. Recreation and play are, no doubt, most necessary for him, but only on condition that they must be of his own accord, free from that contention of mind which is caused by doing a thing by compulsion, or for the sake of obedience. Amusement without perfect freedom of choice, is void of pleasure, and it is not only pleasure which gives the charm to amusement, but which by a natural reaction of the moral and physical elements, renders it salutary. Have we not seen, thousands of times, how warmly children contend among themselves in their plays? "I won't play any more," says the one who thinks him-self aggrieved. He thinks that he has a > this play, he would not be tired of it at the end of four hours. Parents who pretend to make the physical alternate continually with the moral and intellectual education, by arranging, after their own idea, the exercises of the one and of the other, and who, holding the child by the hand, compel him to go round a prescribed circle, condemn him also to slavery as tedious as it is uscless. Let us always remember, that in order to obtain a good physical education, amuse-ments and plays are of the greatest im-portance; and secondly, that these cannot be of any profit, but on two conditions, the one being as essential as the other, viz: pure air and perfect freedom.

> right to say so. The same child would not think of saying, "I won't study any more." Compel him to play "hide and > seek," and at the end of a quarter of an hour he is tired of it; but had he chosen reached the street, took the middle of it, and ran like a deer till he reached a supposed safe distance.

Shortly after this our apothecary resaid he was in his study. No one was permitted to disturb him there, but as it was near dinner time, the visitor sat down to wait for him. In a short time a boiled chicken under a cover was brought in for dinner. An hour passed on, and Sir Isaac did not appear. The doctor then ate the fowl and covering up the empty dish desired the servant to get another ready for his master. Before that was ready, the great man came down. He apologized for his delay, and added, "give me but leave to take my short dinner, and I shall be at your service. I am now fatigued and faint." saying this, he lifted up the cover, and, without any emotion, turned to Stuckley with a smile, "See," said he, "what we, studious people, are! I forgot that I had dined."

On the body of a young man, who committed suicide the other day, by stabbing himself with a bar of soap, were found the following touching lines:

I thought her mine; I thought the world Shone forth with joy for me; I didn't dream in after years I is folly a should see.

But so it proved. I sought her hand—
I really thought I'd get her)—
But, oh alss! her answer came:
"Her mother wouldn't let her!"
